GLOBAL CITIZENSHIP EDUCATION

In an increasingly interconnected world, global challenges cross national borders and concern us all

Globalization draws us together

The number of worldwide internet users increased from 16% in 2005 to 39% in 2013, while in the same period in Africa, this number jumped from 2% to 16%.

The number of people crossing the globe is increasing. 3.1 billion people used air transport in 2013, with an expected rise to more than 6.4 billion by 2030.

A quarter of the content of world exports has foreign value added—indicating an increasingly inter-connected global trading system.

Ongoing tensions and conflicts tear us apart

By the end of 2012, 45.2 million people across the world were forcibly displaced due to persecution, conflict, generalized violence, or human rights violations.

310,000 people died as a direct result of conflict-related injuries in 2000—the majority of them in the poorer parts of the world.

Between 1995 and 2005, 2 million children were killed in situations of armed conflict, while 6 million children were disabled or injured.

Threats to sustainable development and remaining challenges for health and well-being for all

Global emissions of carbon dioxide have increased by more than 46% since 1990.

From 2005 through 2010 South America and Africa each lost more than 3 million hectares a year of forest land.

Despite impressive gains in the number of people living with HIV who are receiving antiretroviral therapy, only 34% of those who need this life-prolonging treatment in low- and middle-income countries are receiving it.

Global Citizenship Education (GCED)

should be based on universal principles, such as Human Rights – inclusion, gender equality, non-discrimination, participation, empowerment, non-violence and respect for all

aims to be transformative - of society and the self needs action at the local level and should be contextualised

in order to help build peaceful and sustainable societies
